“ My sympathies and condolences to Mike's family and friends. I remember him being a little ornery and a little bit of a jokester, all with a special charm that kept him from getting himself into too much trouble with friends and family. May the cherished memories of Mike, help ease the pain of your loss.

“ It's only been a couple days you have left my side and the pain is inevitable. I've known you when you were younger but most importantly being able to know who you have become in these last five years. You struggled with trying to understand kids but were the best dad that they could have asked for. I wouldn't have wanted anyone else to have been their father figure besides you. You were such a happy man and loved when everyone was together. All you wanted was unconditional love and told us that exactly what you received from us. Although things now aren't going how you would have liked it but since you are not here to have a say, others are just taking what they think is theirs even though they were not here to be able to even know you. Be able to know such a loving and funny man. A soul that no one will ever replace, God sure is lucky to have such an angel like you. I'm glad to have shared such a relationship with you and sorry our time was cut short and didn't get to marry as you wanted to. I know you're in a better place now, and your back feels so much better and all the pain is taken away. You will forever be my Pudding and I'll be your Sweetie.

“ Mike came to my daughter's wedding reception a long time back. It was fairly formal but he showed up in shorts and tennis shoes. He was embarrassed and wanted to leave. But I gave him my tux jacket and just told him to stay seated until everyone had a few drinks and it wouldn't make any difference. About 30 minutes later I see him going around with my checkbook (should not have left it in the jacket) asking if there was any way he could help make this or that table's night better. Guess the embarrassment wore off.

“ Mike was one of a kind, A person who lived life with a flare. He didn't sit around and wait for things to happen he did his best to make it happen. He had a passion for life, people, and having fun. Mike was good at about everything he did, I wish he could be here to see this beautiful morning and maybe he can. We all need to be thankful that we can.
